Miss Marie Davis Becomes Bride of Willard Price

A wedding of much local interest took place yesterday afternoon at 4 o'clock in Williamston, N. C., when Miss Marie Davis, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Oscar Davis of Body Road, became the bride of Charles Willard Price, son of Mr. and Mrs. Charles Price of City Route One.

The bride was becomingly attired in a navy blue crepe Elizabeth dress with a short coat of white shawlskin trimmed in the dress material. She wore a white starched linen hat and her accessories were white. Her flowers were a corsage of bride's roses and valley lilies. Mrs. Clarence Jones of Williamston was the bride's only attendant and she wore a dress of pink shawlskin with accessories of white and a shoulder corsage of pink roses.

Mr. Clarence Jones acted as best man. Immediately following the ceremony Mr. Price and his bride left for a wedding trip to Asheville. Upon their return they will be at home at 622 Cedar street.

Eagle That Looks Across Erie

THIS is one of the huge but stately eagles that flank the Court of the Presidents at the Great Lakes Exposition at Cleveland. The great statues look out over Lake Erie and Yeomanettes Betty Campion and Ruth Kirkhope are enjoying the view from their precarious perch atop the supporting pillar. The exposition, already attended by thousands, will continue through September 6. Unique architecture is an exposition feature.

Everyday Movies By Denys Wortman

"I'll bet one of her fellers are comin', Mom! Look how she's cleaning"

Caroline Chatfield Says

When man ignores his responsibility to his family it is pretty sure sign he is not grown up mentally or morally. Wife should treat him as ailing child.

DEAR MISS CHATFIELD:

My husband used to be a model; he was unselfish, generous, loving. Now he wastes his money on friends and foolishness, deprives the children and me of everything but food. He still expects a good table all the time but puts up a small penny for it. He provides no amusement for me or the children and yells if they raise any racket when he's at home. He must be insane. I agree that the man who earns the money should keep a reasonable portion of it for his pleasure but I don't agree that he has the right to spend the lion's share being a good guy with friends while his family hasn't the price of a movie ticket. Is it not a man's duty to look after for those who love him and are dependent upon him? My husband's living while not large is ample to supply all our needs and I am sick of bickering over the subject. If you will tell a distressed wife how to make him see the other side of the question she will thank you.

W. H. K.

ANSWER:

Leave off the bickering and the scolding. Turn in and show your husband that he can have more fun with his family than with his men friends. Show him that he can get more for his money spent on his wife and children than he can get for money squandered on being a good guy. That's a large order, but it won't take as much out of you to fill it as you are now wasting in being unpleasant.

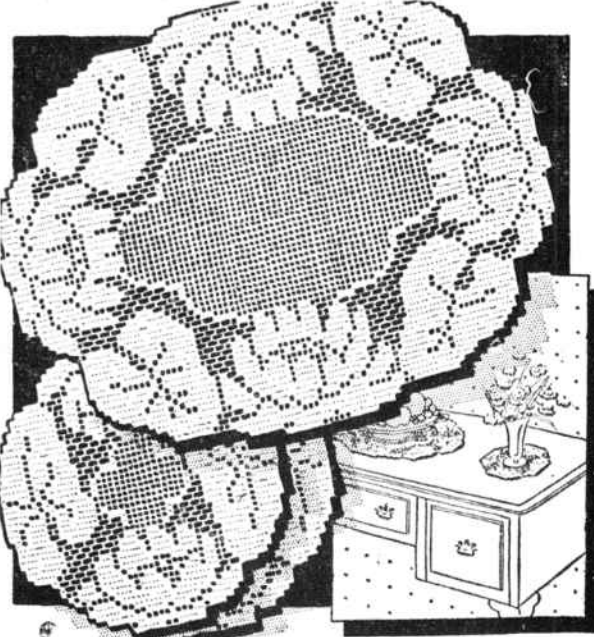

Suppose you have been a model wife and don't deserve what you are getting, martyr airs won't get you anything better. A man knows a woman's martyr manner is only another stick to beat him over the head and cat, dog, child and husband invariably run away from the punishing stick. The more they deserve punishment the faster and further they run.

No doubt every wife who has been faced with the spectacle of her lashing and the nagging method of standing up to put stiffening in his husband's going to pieces before her very eyes has tried the tongue spine. No doubt every wife who has ever tried it has failed; for a husband can't be controlled through fear of a wife. She can't make him do right by criticizing him and complaining of him.

Certainly it is a man's duty to look out for his dependents and when he ignores his family responsibilities, wastes his substance in riotous living and races about like an unbroken colt it is pretty good evidence that he isn't grown up mentally or morally. There are a lot of big babies masquerading as men and their wives have to treat them as ailing children, coddle them, coax them, divert them, entertain them, charm the money out of their pockets. That's the only sort of pocket picking that is successful; for these big babies hold on to the money to make them feel like men.

Problems of general interest submitted by readers will be discussed in this column. Letters unsuitable for publication will be answered personally, provided they contain stamped, self-addressed envelopes. All names are held in confidence. White Miss Chatfield, in care of this newspaper.

PARIS STYLES

By MARY FENTRESS
United Press Staff Correspondent
Paris, (U.P.)—The new hats of the Duchess of Windsor will set another fashion style. She wears her hair simply drawn into a knot at the back of the head from a central part. This type hair-dressing, which she has not changed for two years, is not easily suited to modern hats so the Duchess repeats in various colors any models that suit her and please her.

Two outstanding models make up the 30 or 40 hats included in her large trousseau. With her many knitted suits in all colors for sports or for morning, the Duchess has selected tiny pill-box hats in wool fabrics which are held in place by a strap and bow at the back of the head. The wool fabric has been dyed to match the one and two-piece wool suits.

Blue, as always, is the outstanding color in her trousseau and in the choice of new hats. The newest and smartest shade is "Wallis blue," which is a light tone not quite like hyacinth. It is a tone specially dyed for her by one of the big Paris dressmaking establishments.

She has one rust colored suit and has ordered to match a straight little rust straw sailor which is made with a shallow
